

History

Doyle Henderson, founder of Doyle's Valves, Inc. began buying and selling surplus valves and other oilfield equipment in early 1974. In 1978, Doyle Henderson moved his family to Corpus Christi to open a valve repair facility. Over the next thirty years, he built one of the largest inventories of valves and wellhead equipment in South Texas, along with a legendary reputation in the industry. Mr. Henderson passed away on September 21st, 2005.

Following his Father's death, Dan Henderson assumed control of the company. The company has grown steadily over the past several years, and has expanded its operations through both organic growth, and strategic acquisitions.
